"A PISTOL POINT PROPOSAL"

Universal Two Reel Western

Starring EDDIE POLO

Cyclone Smith is the toughest puncher on the ranch, but terribly bashful in the presence of the ladies. The boss' pretty niece is more than passingly fond of Smith, but all the latter can do is to hesitate and remark "I think it's goin' t' rain".

Despite the efforts everybody makes to help him with his suit, she starts for town without having bagged his proposal. Smith gets word that the stage coach in which she has gone off in, has been robbed- of her.

He dashes up the side of a cliff, to her rescue, and enters a cabin through the roof. Here he finds her the prisoner of the ranch foreman. Then he discovers that his gun is missing and he seizes her assailant taking his gun away.

The cabin is attacked. Men seem to be dropping right and left, shot dead. Then he leads the girl out the back way and when they reach the edge of the cliff the gang give them both the merry 'Ha, ha', telling him all the guns were loaded with blanks.

Then it is that Cyclone accepts their dare and kisses the girl.
